COPYRIGHT NOTICE & GUIDELINES FOR REPRODUCTION OF PHOTOGRAPHS AND OTHER MATERIALS

The Aurora Town Historian's Office encourages the sharing of local history! In most cases, photographs and other materials from the Aurora Town Historian's Office archives may be published, shared on social media (including Facebook), and/or copied and displayed.

We simply ask that when items from the collection are shared on the Internet (even casually on Facebook), in a publication, or as part of any public display, please credit: "From the archives of the Aurora Town Historian's Office." This gives credit to the many volunteers and donors who over the past century helped catalogue and preserve the items, and it enables people to easily find the original source of your material.

Some photographs and documents in the archives have special citation requirements, many of which were placed on them by the generous donors. These materials, as well as any citations from newspapers and books, should be properly credited. Please direct any questions about special citation requirements to the Aurora Town Historian's Office.

COPYRIGHT NOTICE: Many of the documents and photographs contained in the archives of the Aurora Town Historian's Office are in the public domain. However, some may be subject to copyright. We do our best to label materials that have known copyright or licensing restrictions. However, the Aurora Town Historian's Office makes no representations or warranties regarding the copyright status of any materials. Permission to reproduce or photograph material does not imply permission to publish. Anyone who publishes materials from the collection (even casually on the Internet) is responsible for securing necessary permissions and for ensuring that copyright laws and courtesies are followed.
